Skill Building Resources for Faculty

While there is no one path for each faculty member, this framework for our online content was designed in response to our research with faculty. This graphic represents our upcoming and current series for faculty of video courses and related content. Starting at the bottom, the foundation is balancing writing, teaching and service. Once productivity, time management and writing pipelines are flowing, it is essential to develop greater self-awareness to best handle self-doubt, the imposter syndrome, and difficult conversations with co-authors and others. Once skills are developed more consciously around these challenges, work life navigation often becomes a priority. This is often followed by renewed attention to one's network and brand, and the language you use to refine your academic legacy.

The following pages will connect you to some of our resources that will help support each of these important areas of focus. Please go to our website: academicimpressions.com for a more comprehensive view of our offerings.
